

Ember's Brave Sky Journey

In a kingdom high above the clouds, lived a small dragon named Ember. Ember often sat on a sparkling crystal ledge, watching the big sky.

Ember lived in a cozy, sparkling crystal cave. From inside, Ember peeked out at the big, beautiful world. So many fluffy clouds and tall, pointy mountains! Ember felt a tiny bit small, watching it all.

Outside, other dragons soared and swooped with happy chirps and giggles! They danced high above, playing tag through fluffy white clouds. Little Ember watched from her quiet spot, a tiny sigh escaping her lips.

Ember watched the dragons play, wishing so much to join them. But a big fluttery fear kept Ember on the ground, making Ember's heart feel a little heavy. Just then, a gentle shadow fell, and Grandmother Dragon smiled kindly.

Grandmother Dragon gently knelt down beside Ember. "What troubles you, little one?" she asked, her voice soft and kind. Ember looked up, her big eyes still a little wet, and whispered, "I'm scared to fly, Grandmother."

Grandmother Dragon wrapped a gentle wing around Ember. 'Oh, little one,' she said kindly. 'Everyone feels scared sometimes. Bravery means trying, even when you are afraid.'

Then, Grandmother Dragon showed Ember just what she meant. She gently flapped her big, beautiful wings a tiny bit and hopped from a very low, safe ledge. For just a moment, she floated in the air, light as a feather.

Ember took a very deep, brave breath. Then, with a little flutter of tiny wings, Ember made a wobbly jump! For a magical second, Ember floated, just a tiny bit above the soft, green ground.

Ember landed softly back on the fluffy cloud-grass. A huge, happy smile spread across Ember's face! 'I did it!' Ember chirped with excitement. Grandmother Dragon beamed with pride, her wise eyes twinkling.

Ember looked up at the big, beautiful sky again. It didn't feel scary at all now! Ember knew that tomorrow, with a brave heart, another little try would be even more fun. What a wonderful feeling bravery was!

The End